

Communication in a Remote Environment

Wednesday, July 15, 2020

10 - 11 AM

Tom McCluskey
Instructor of Organizational Theory Management
Pepperdine Graziadio Business School

Communication in a virtual workforce is the foundation for employees working remotely. In this session, you will learn the best practices for using Zoom (and how to prepare to be on camera), building trust, and running effective and efficient meetings for quality work and personal connections.

Tom McCluskey is currently an instructor at Pepperdine University and UCLA. Tom is also a private consultant for businesses, higher education institutions, and non-profit organizations. He has over 20 years of experience in executive leadership, entrepreneurship, and media sales management. As an expert in entrepreneurship, the virtual workplace, and change management, Tom has presented on trends in global entrepreneurship and how to assess a global entrepreneurial venture for success at the International Center for Global Leadership's annual conference. Tom was also a panelist at Pepperdine's Women in Leadership Conference, discussing how to mentor female entrepreneurs. Tom has also previously worked at Time Warner, Gannett, and Rodale Press.
